INTRODUCTION

The roads are under the government of the county courts, subject to be controuled by the general court. They order new roads to be opened whenever they think them necessary. The inhabitants of the county are by them laid off into precincts, to each of which they allot a convenient portion of the public roads to be kept in repair. Such bridges as may be built without the assistance of artificers, they are to be built. If the stream be such as to require a bridge of regular workmanship, the court employs workmen to build it, at the expense of the whole county. If it be too great for the county, application is made to the general assembly, who authorize individuals to build it, and to take a fixed toll from all passengers, or give sanction to such other proposition as to them appears reasonable.

The establishment and maintenance of public roads was one of the most important functions of the County Court during the colonial period in Virginia. Each road was opened and maintained by an Overseer of Highways appointed by the Gentlemen Justices yearly. He was usually assigned all the “Labouring Male Titheables” living on or near the road for this purpose. These individuals then furnished all their own tools, wagons, and teams and were required to labour for six days each year on the roads.

Major projects, such as bridges over rivers, demanding considerable expenditures were executed by Commissioners appointed by the Court to select the site and to contract with workmen for the construction. Where bridges connected two counties, a commission was appointed by each and they cooperated in executing the work.

At its inception, Orange County comprised a large part of the Piedmont frontier east of the Blue Ridge, the Valley, and the as yet unsettled lands stretching to the west to the Mississippi River. Orange was described by the 1734 act providing for its creation as all the land west of the Parish of St. George in Spotsylvania “and all the territory adjoining to and above the said line, bounded southerly by the line of Hanover County, northerly by the grant of Lord Fairfax, and westerly by the utmost limits of Virginia.” At this time, Hanover County included the present Louisa County and roughly the northern third of modern Albemarle. Lord Fairfax had as his southern boundary the Rappahannock River.

The virtually unlimited western boundary of the original Orange County was intended both to facilitate western settlement and to increase the county’s effectiveness as a buffer against the French influence advancing into the center of the continent. East of the Blue Ridge, settlement and the beginnings of at least rudimentary road building in that part of Spotsylvania County that was to become Orange County had begun about 1720 and had continued to grow through the 1720’s and 1730’s. West of the mountains, immigration and settlement were slightly later, beginning in the late 1720’s.

The years 1734-1749 were those during which Orange was a giant county. By the end of this time period it had shrunk to very nearly its present size. The scale of the county as originally conceived made administration unwieldy, and like other large frontier counties created as a response to continued westward movement, Orange lost the majority of its territory within twenty years of its creation. The Valley region, as Frederick and Augusta counties (including then all the later counties in that area), and Culpeper County (then including the modern counties of Culpeper, Madison, and Rappahannock) became separate entities during the 1740’s. It would take only the separation of Greene County in 1838 to bring Orange into its present-day form.

The road orders contained in this volume cover the period from 1750 to 1800 during which Orange County still contained within its boundaries Greene County. In addition, this volume also contains data on transportation arteries connecting Orange County of this period with the surrounding counties: Spotsylvania to the east, Louisa and Albemarle to the south, the Blue Ridge and the counties of the Shenandoah Valley to the west, and Culpeper (present-day Culpeper, Madison and Rappahannock counties) to the north. As few road orders for eighteenth-century Culpeper County survive, this volume contains the principal extant evidence concerning the later eighteenth-century road development of an area of the Virginia Piedmont stretching from the western border of Spotsylvania County to the Blue Ridge.
THE DEVELOPMENT OF ORANGE COUNTY

Note: As originally published in paper format, this volume included maps showing the evolution of the county. Maps are not included in the revised/electronic version due to legibility and file size considerations. Instead, a verbal description is provided.

Prior to 1720, the area that is now Orange County was part of the far western reaches of Essex County, King and Queen, and King William counties. In 1720, the present territory of Orange County was included within newly-formed Spotsylvania County, which included the present counties of Spotsylvania, Orange, Greene, Culpeper, Madison, and Rappahannock east of the Blue Ridge Mountains, and a portion of the Shenandoah Valley as far west as the Shenandoah River.

In 1734, Orange County was created from Spotsylvania County. A giant county at its formation, Orange included the present-day counties of Orange, Greene, Culpeper, Madison, and Rappahannock east of the Blue Ridge Mountains, as well as the territory west of the mountains extending, at least nominally, to the Mississippi River.

In 1749, the northern portion of Orange County lying east of the Blue Ridge and north of the Rapidan River was cut off as Culpeper County (containing the present counties of Culpeper, Madison and Rappahannock). The remnant territory of Orange County included within its boundaries the present-day counties of Orange and Greene. This was the extent of Orange County during the period covered by this volume. The creation of Greene County from the western portion of Orange in 1838 brought Orange County to its current boundaries.
